ABSTRACT

After the d.P.R. 31 of 2017 we highlight the changes in the legislation with particular reference to the surfaces of Italian landscape architectures. We question about what are the public administrations new tools to manage the transformations of one of the main building components that influences the perception of art cities and minor historical centers of our Country.

Through the analysis of the regulations and the additional elements that define them, it emerges that a fundamental role for the protection of these elements is assumed by the capacity and sensitivity of the Municipalities to adopt punctual and incisive sector regulations.
